

Sanura's old house

New House adds Years to Sanura

It's a Sunday morning; she is seated on a veranda at her new house as some of the grandchildren are coming from the spring to fetch water. When she saw us, she jumped up praising PEFO for changing her life with a new house. Sanura Kyakuwaire testifies how a new house changed her life.

"I don't know how I can express my happiness to appreciate PEFO for building me this new big house. My grand children are happy and joyfully living. I believe I can live for more 10 years as they grow up. I had lost hope because we used to live like animals in the small house, but now I live like a princess. Our lives have totally changed. We no longer have constant illness caused by malaria like we used to be.

One day one of the health workers went to the house I used to live in. she thought I died since I had taken long without going to the health center. She was surprised that mere having a new house changed my health status. People used to laugh at me saying the old woman would die at anytime, but I and the grandchildren no longer suffer from constant Malaria like it used be. My grandchildren now live and sleep safely because we are no longer scare of snakes that used to enter our house. I am grateful to PEFO for Sanura and her family were living in a pathetic house which was also too small to accommodate the family of 7 people. The house was also located in a road reserve where one time her grandchild survived an accident when a vehicle lost control. Also being near the road, with heavy vehicles passing, the house would shake exposing the family to danger. Whenever it could rain, the house leaked and mud filled inside. Her new house was built in another piece of land she has where the family is safe from danger.

She was born in 1939 in a family of 4 children, only 2 still living. She takes care of 6 grand children. For her survival, Sanura together with her grand children grow food for home consumption on a small piece of land. They grow maize, beans and sweet potatoes.

Sanura's house was built by PEFO with support from Partners on the Global Giving Platform.
